Introduction

What's in a number? Actually there are only 10 unique digits, but so much of our lives and places of Alabama by the Numbers - Important and Curious numbers about Alabama and her cities (States by the Numbers Book 1) living are defined by them. People have Social Security Numbers, locations have Postal Codes, People have telephone numbers, locations have addresses, and the list goes on and on.

As people addresses, cities are defined by their longitudes and latitudes, elevation, population and a slew of other numbers.

These numbers can tell us a great deal about where a city is located, what cities are close to it, what cities share common attributes and some believe that they can tell a city's general personality.

Numerology is any study of the purported divinestical or other special relationship between a count or measurement counting and life. A person's numerological profile is based on their birthday. House's are based on their house number. So, a city's can be based on its longitude and latitude.

For example, if a person's birthday is May 24, 1961, then the numerological counterpart of that is  $0+5+2+4+1+9+6+1 = 28$ . Further reducing the  $2+8$  down to 10 and this further reduces to  $1+0 = 1$ .

House numbers are added in the same way. Our office is at 17011 Lincoln, and that adds to  $1+7+0+1+1 = 10 \implies 1$ . The number 1 is the numerological number Alabama by the Numbers - Important and Curious numbers about Alabama and her cities (States by the Numbers Book 1) for "creativity and confidence," so for authors, even our location fits our personality.

Using Dan Millman's "The Life You Were Born to Live" as a guide to help determine the characteristics of the city's numerology, we'll classify each one down to its root number using its longitude and latitude.

The earth is 24,901.55 miles around at the equator; 24,859.82 miles through the poles. There are 360 degrees in a full circle, 60 Alabama by the Numbers - Important and Curious numbers about Alabama and her cities (States by the Numbers Book 1) minutes in each degree, and 60 seconds in each minute. As a very rough rule of thumb, each minute calculates to be  $24901/360/60 = 1.15$  miles in distance for each minute of longitude or latitude. Of course, lines of longitude grow closer as they go further away from the equator, whereas lines of latitude stay consistent in their distance apart. Since North America is up from the equator somewhat, we are just going to call it a mile diameter measurement for each minute of angular distance on the earth's surface. (We know this isn't really ever going to be a consistent measurement across the country, but it is Alabama by the Numbers - Important and Curious numbers about Alabama and her cities (States by the Numbers Book 1) in the right ballpark.)

What all this means is that locating a city to whole degrees is not accurate enough, to the nearest second provides too fine of a resolution, but Alabama by the Numbers - Important and Curious numbers about Alabama and her cities (States by the Numbers Book 1) to the nearest minute (roughly a mile) is just about right. Hence, for all numerological calculations in this book we use degrees and minutes for both longitude and latitude of each city.

For calculating the distances between cities we use the full longitude and latitude location of each, which gives an accurate distance 'as the crow flies' along the surface of the earth. Using these calculations, we list the closest five cities to the city being profiled. Sometimes, it is surprising to know who are your closest neighbors. (We were!)

We'll provide a few other fun numbers for each of these cities. Using the versatile Kindle linking system, this Alabama by the Numbers - Important and Curious numbers about Alabama and her cities (States by the Numbers Book 1) allows you to read this book several different ways - by longitude, by latitude, alphabetically, by population or by personality type. We're pretty sure, you'll never the read this book the same way twice!

Enjoy!
