Chapter 1

As Freya walked Cloak of Dreams through the mall, she noticed a shop she had never seen before. The front of the shop resembled one of those old medieval buildings you would see somewhere in Cloak of Dreams Europe. It looked completely authentic, its white front decorated with half timbering, just like pictures she had seen of buildings from Tudor times. In the peak of the steep roof was a tiny window with a candle flickering through it.

All of the windows on the shop front were covered with what looked like real snow and frost and from inside the windows there was a warm, enticing glow. There was an actual door you had to open to get into the shop, an old wooden door with a big, brass handle that looked like it had actually once belonged on some real medieval building. This is so enchanting! thought Freya. I've never seen anything like this before and I've been to this mall Cloak of Dreams a hundred times. It was so unusual and out of place and it compelled Freya to go in.

It was nearing Christmas which was why Freya was in the mall in the first place. She only had her sister, Christina's, gift left to buy and she was hoping to get it bought that day, in the hopes of Cloak of Dreams avoiding the even bigger crowds that the next few weeks would surely bring. The mall was crowded enough as it was. Although she always looked forward to the holidays, jostling elbows with other shoppers in a crowded mall didn't appeal to her. I've got to get that Christmas gift today. I'm not leaving this mall until I buy her something.

It was then that she noticed that there seemed to be no one about. It seemed that it was just a minute ago that Freya had been among a throng of shoppers. Where has everyone gone? She looked around. Not one person in sight. How strange! She shrugged her shoulders and decided that she must Cloak of Dreams have been daydreaming again and not noticed that the crowd had thinned out. Or in this case, completely gone. Walking the few steps to the ancient looking door of the shop, she slowly turned the large, brass handle. When she stepped inside Cloak of Dreams she stood for a few moments, staring at the beautiful, cozy sight before her. It was more enchanting inside than it was outside, like something out of a fairy tale. She felt like she had really stepped back in time, into some Cloak of Dreams medieval shop from long ago. It brought a smile to her face.

A huge, twinkling Christmas tree, adorned with tinsel and Cloak of Dreams old fashioned ornaments, filled one Cloak of Dreams corner of the room. Lovely, antique, wooden shelves and tables were filled with wonderful displays of old fashioned and antique items. Nutcracker soldiers, music boxes, nativity scenes and figurines of Saint Nicholas filled the shelves and table tops.

About a hundred candles and lanterns were scattered about, filling the shop with a warm, orange glow. Is it even legal to have candles burning like this? I'm sure there's probably some health and safety rule against it, thought Freya. Being in the shop gave her a warm, fuzzy feeling and she walked around taking it all in. Under a glass counter, she noticed a selection of vintage jewellery, small and large gemstones set in unique, silver necklaces, bracelets and crosses. The quality looked exceptional. What a beautiful selection! I know Christina would love would love one of these. But, I'm Cloak of Dreams pretty sure they are out of my budget.

Taking her eyes away from the jewellery, she wandered through the quiet shop. Feeling a bit dreamy, she wondered why there seemed to be a light haze in the air, making it seem like many of the objects had no definite outline. It must be the glow from all the candles.

Then she remembered. She needed to buy Christina a Christmas present. She had been so lost in thought, she had almost forgotten. It was always hard to find something for her sister. What do you buy for someone who seemed to have Cloak of Dreams everything and needed nothing? But those vintage rings and bracelets she had just been looking at were just the thing. She had seen more than a few that she knew her sister would love. Beautiful and unique. Freya sighed. How much over her budget was she willing to go? She walked back to the counter and peered through the glass at the selection of jewellery.

"May I help you, my dear?" said a voice behind her.

Freya spun around. She had been so lost in thought that she hadn't Cloak of Dreams heard anyone come up behind her. The friendly looking shopkeeper had a kind smile on her worn, wrinkled face. Gray hair was swept up into a knotted bun and she was wearing a long, brown, old fashioned dress with a long, white apron overtop. thought. Well, they've Cloak of Dreams succeeded. The atmosphere in this place is absolutely magical!

Freya returned the shopkeeper's smile. "Oh, I'm doing some Christmas shopping," said Freya. "I have to tell you, this place is absolutely fantastic. I could spend all day in here. I've never seen this shop before."

"Oh," said the shopkeeper, "we're new. Just set up a few days ago. So, what can Cloak of Dreams I help you with, young lady?"

"I'm looking for a Christmas gift for my sister, actually," said Freya. "It's always a challenge because she has everything she wants. She's also picky. But, I know that she would really love this bracelet here," she said, pointing to one under the glass case. "But I'm afraid to ask how much it cost."

"Ah yes, these Scandinavian pieces are lovely," said the shopkeeper, lifting the piece out from under the glass and handing it to Freya.
