-PROLOGUE-

Jumping To The Next Morning.

He stepped out of the rear door of the car, sweat was pouring down his brow, although the heavy rain instantly cooled his head whilst soaking his neck and shoulders, the cold water trickling between any tiny gaps it could find and flowing in small rivulets across Crash Dump the skin on his back, but he didn't care.

His eyes were welling with tears but there was no one on the deserted street to witness them, apart from him across the road watching from his car, just waiting for the right moment to send him and all he came into contact with to oblivion.

He closed his eyes and thought, how had he even got there?

He knew that this would almost certainly be in vain, he had no guarantees, no real genuine assurances that he would stick to what he had promised, but if he didn't do this what future would he have anyway, what was the point living a hollow life containing nothing but unbelievable guilt, unbearable loneliness, Crash Dump and the knowledge that it had all been down to him.

This was wrong, no far more than wrong, this was evil beyond his comprehension, selfishly motivated evilness, but he had to do it. He had no choice, always reminding himself of that one simple fact, I have no choice.

He knew that he was supposed to die, sacrifice himself for the one thing in life he Crash Dump loved above anything or anyone else. If there was some kind of afterlife, which he so hoped there wasn't, he knew he would no doubt spend it eternally burning in hell.

For he deserved to.

As he Crash Dump stood there outside the impressive white four storey Georgian town house, Crash Dump he knew that it was too late, there would be no miracles, no reprieves, this was the end.

He wasn't a religious man, never had been, but he began to mutter to himself, "Our father, who Crash Dump art in heaven..."

"Blast!"

There had been an almost inaudible phutt before the image of that morning's work was replaced by the blue screen with no more than the legend 'NO SIGNAL'.

"Shit!" Felix Fernando proclaimed getting up from the chair he had been happily working in and pacing around the room, his fingers on both hands entwined in his thick uncombed hair, an hour and a half he had spent on that report, and just like that it had gone.

It wasn't even a day he was supposed to Crash Dump be at work, he was just clearing stuff Crash Dump up, getting things sorted while he had the chance.

He wondered how much of it would be lost? How much saved by hopefully the auto-save function having kicked in at some point?

But he had no idea, an hour and half, of his own time, potentially wasted, "Bloody computer, bloody pile of crap!"

"You alright in there?" Alex called from Crash Dump the living room the other side of the pine door.

"No I'm not! It's that bloody bastard computer again, crashed, no warning, no nothing. Come and have Crash Dump a look will you, see if you can do anything about it, you know about computers and stuff?" Felix called back, more in hope than any belief that Alex could actually fix the damn thing.

Alex came through to join him, wearing nothing but a pair of boxer shorts, a cup of coffee in one hand and a small pile of biscuits in the other.

"Hoof it in the skip. It's fucked up Dad, and I don't mean emotionally confused or troubled, it's had it, you know that. What you doing that for?"

Felix was on all fours sliding the side panel from the black metallic box that housed, what was ten years previously, Crash Dump hi-tech processors, electrical gubbins, and God only knows what else.

"I'm going to Hoover it out, it sometimes works, it's probably just over heated."

"No Dad, it's probably just fucked."

Felix looked up, he knew Alex was right, just eighteen years old, but the kid was nearly always right, cocky little twat. He rose to his feet, "Here, give me one of those biccies, before you munch the lot."

"Get lost, get your own!" Alex said laughing, pulling his fistful of biscuits from his father's reach.

"Let's get something straight matey, they are my own, as is that coffee, as is that cup, even that poxy computer, in fact everything Crash Dump here is mine, well except Crash Dump your colossal Uni debt, so give me a sodding biscuit and shut up."

He took a couple of Crash Dump the Chocolate Hobnobs from his son's hand and dunked one in Alex's coffee cup.

“Ah what’s the point eh, it’s bugged.” Felix said with a tone of resignation, which reflected that he had accepted that all that work would never be miraculously reappearing on the monitor when the machine eventually decided it wanted to function again. “It’ll only give me that poxy blue screen of death, Crash dump wallop, fatal error, lada-dada-da, you’re right it’s fucked. Get your coat let’s go out.”
