Dulci's Legacy

CHAPTER ONE

God, I hope this place is better than junior high, Dulci Oyselle thought as she passed through the tall double Dulci's Legacy doors into Dulci's Legacy Glace Cove High School. It was the first day of the new Dulci's Legacy school year, the air was crisp with chill, and Dulci yearned for something different.

She'd grown up in Glace Cove, and it was so small that her eighth grade class had consisted of thirteen individuals, twelve of whom she'd known since birth. The one 'new' person was Carly Smith, whose family were still considered newcomers after ten years in town.

Despite the smallness of the pool however, Dulci had few people she considered friends. She was small for her age, and rather timid. She was Dulci's Legacy not athletic, in a town which chiefly valued their hockey team and deep-sea fishing prospects. She had one friend, her best friend: Mehron Tebnek, who was the daughter of her father's friend, Tuotu Tebnek. Don Oyselle and Tuotu worked together on the scientific research ships that left from Cape Breton Island, often on long sea voyages bound for the Dulci's Legacy Arctic Circle.

They'd hung out a lot this summer, talking about what would make high school so much better than junior high, while their dads were out to sea. Mehron dreamed about the freedom to go out on dates when she got her driving license in a couple years, but Dulci longed more for a larger circle of friends. No offense to Mehron, of course, but she wasn't musical, and Dulci loved music, especially the Celtic music so celebrated on the Island. She'd Dulci's Legacy been learning to play her bodhràn, and secretly hoped to find others interested in folk music at the high school, so that she wouldn't only be playing with septuagenarians. And while Mehron had already been asked on a couple of dates, no one had yet asked Dulci. She didn't think it was likely that high school would be any different on that account. With mousy brown hair instead of her friend's shiny black, and skinny awkward limbs instead of well-developed running muscles, she thought it better to concentrate on her music and her studies. Her parents supported the academic focus, praising her awards and honors.

Dulci's Legacy

The materials she'd gotten in the mail said that school would start with an assembly in the large gymnasium, where students would sort themselves into homerooms and advisory groups, both new concepts to Dulci. She flowed along with the human traffic to the gym, rubbing shoulders with the elbows of what had to be a senior basketball player on her right. She looked up briefly, caught the surprised glance of blue eyes under curly hair and a ball cap, then looked forward again, lest she be swept away by the undertow.

As they filed into the gym, she glanced around, remembering the shiny sealed-wood flooring and the white-painted brick walls from when she'd cheered on Mehron in a Junior League basketball tournament last year. Her eyes scanned the bleachers for her friend, but there was no sign of her, so she reluctantly climbed up to the higher rows to sit. The principal was standing patiently at a microphone at half court as the rest of the student body settled in: all told, about 120 students.
