Chapter One

Stephanie

Stephanie Hartwell marched into her editor-in-chief's office, flung the door shut, and slammed her stained coffee mug on his desk.

"No. Give me that story, Dave. Those assholes out there have had the chance to prove themselves. A million chances. I didn't go to USC to write theater reviews."

Dave failed to suppress a smile. "Nothing personal, Steph. The Volynsky trade is a big deal, and I need someone familiar with Seattle sports to cover it."

The veins in her neck throbbed, and a flush burned her face. She'd never been good at controlling her emotions, especially anger. Especially when he was underestimating her because she had tits. "I've been here three years. You want 'familiar'? Volynsky has played Firebird (The Firebird Trilogy Book 1) all eighty-two games for the past four seasons. Eighty points or higher in each of those seasons. Leads the league in shots on goal and is top ten in assists. He's a plus-three, plays at least twenty-one minutes a game, and averages forty-eight goals per Firebird (The Firebird Trilogy Book 1) season. Shall I go on?"
