
The Longest Ride

“Man, what a downpour!” I shouted to the guy sharing the underpass with me. “Do you think it will last long?”

He looked out at the maelstrom going on all around us. “It’ll be at least an hour before it’s clear enough to ride safely.” He held out a pack Longest Ride of cigarettes. “Here, have a smoke and relax.”

We Longest Ride both leaned back on our bikes and watched the smoke get blown away by the rain rooster tails of the passing cars. “Not many things worth getting killed over and getting’ down the road isn’t one of ‘em.” He looked over at me. “Where you goin’ in such a hurry?”

How could I describe what was going on inside of me? Lisa and I coming so close to breaking up, getting our own places, trying to learn how to live without one another. Six months of pretending that we were happy with idiots that we didn’t even like. Then her phone call last night. I’m miserable too, baby. Only one more hour until I can tell you to your face all the things that I tried to tell you last night.

I tried to tell this guy all about you, about what had happened to us, but the cars passing us in the rain kept drowning out my words. Finally we just sat there pondering our private thoughts.
