
Note: This is Book 2 of the Mama B Series

Description: Mama B thought her life would return to normal, but when her nephew, Derrick, comes knocking on her door, she has to reconsider. Though she's not known for housing marital fugitives, she realizes Derrick is looking for more than a place to stay; he needs help finding his way back to God. Of course, help is almost Mama B's middle name until Henrietta crosses the line with her accusations about Mama B's intentions with the recently widowed pastor. Mama B isn't looking for romance with either the pastor or her suitor, Dr. Wilson—but will love come looking for her?

Acknowledgments

Thank You, Father, for allowing me to write this book. I'm grateful that You entertain my wishes more often than not. It's so sweet to be in a relationship with You. You are the ultimate Giver.

Thanks to my husband, daughter, and son for continued support. When I think of you all, I'm extremely grateful. I can only imagine how hard it is to live with a quirky artist (I know –it's hard for me to live with my whims sometimes, too). God made you people for me, and vice versa!

Special thanks to my parents for good old-fashioned home training. Mama Mama B - A Time to Dance (Book 2) B would Mama B - A Time to Dance (Book 2) be proud.

Big shout out to my fellow Christian authors. God is doing this thing through us. I'm grateful to be in the number. Be strong, be of good cheer, and do not faint.

Thanks to Karen Rodgers for your editorial contribution.

About the Author

Chapter 1

Pastor Phillips sure Mama B - A Time to Dance (Book 2) was lookin' good and strong up there in the pulpit again. Hadn't been but a few months since our first lady passed away, but the Lord was restoring Pastor Phillips the same as He did me when my Mama B - A Time to Dance (Book 2) Albert died. It takes a while, but after the one you done shared a bed and a life with for forty something-odd years dies, it's hard to sleep at night again. We do the best we can to get settled. Can't get too settled, though, 'cause at our age, we know it won't be Mama B - A Time to Dance (Book 2) long before it's our time to go, too.

I was sixty-four when Albert died. Eight years and five months ago. Some time, seem like it was just yesterday, though, especially if I get to thinking 'bout it too hard. So I don't. Albert wouldn't want me to spend what little time I got left feelin' sorry for myself.

Besides, I assure you, Albert Jackson, Sr., is not Mama B - A Time to Dance (Book 2) up in heaven moping around about me. Knowing him, he probably ain't even asked Jesus if I was coming up soon. Too busy asking David and Paul all those questions he had about the Bible. Whew – that Albert could talk your ear off!

Yes, Albert was something else.

And so was first lady Geneva Phillips. She sure gon' be missed.

Soon as service was over, you couldn't beat Henrietta skatin' herself up to the pulpit to talk to Pastor, standing by his side while he greet the visitors. Mama B - A Time to Dance (Book 2) Good Lord, it was a shame the way that woman threw herself at him. She got to be at least three years older than me, carrying on like she need special prayer from Pastor.

She need special prayer, alright. Pray herself right on back to the altar and into the baptism pool!

Lord, I'm sorry.

Nevermind Henrietta, I rushed out the church and across the lawn through the gate to my own back yard. Had to hurry and transfer the pulled chicken simmering in barbeque sauce to a proper Tupperware bowl. Once I'd packed that up, I wrapped up a few rolls in foil, scooped a couple of servings of baked beans into another bowl. Finally, I scraped half the pan of peach cobbler aside for myself, kept the other half in the original throw-away container and slapped some plastic on top.
