Chapter One

“Go now!”

He pressed his palm against her back, directing her towards the cottage.

The building was tucked in a hidden fold of Balnakeilly Bay, beyond Rhubodach. She walked down the last fifty metres or so of the single track road towards the shore and saw a figure through the floor-to-ceiling windows.

He was moving around in the living room, as if gathering items. He looked up when he saw her approach, and noted her car parked in the passing place at the Murder on the Isle of Bute (Clyde Trilogy Book 2) top of the hill. His momentary frown changed quickly to a smile.

“I didn’t expect this,” he said, opening the door for her. He kept on his smile. “I thought we had said our farewells.” He saw she was wearing a blue silk dress and black stiletto heels.

She stood in the middle of the room and glanced around. There was nothing of him left now apart from his laptop and overnight bag, both of which were lying on the polished oak table.

“I couldn’t content myself,” she replied. “I’m sorry. I just couldn’t help it. I needed to see you one more time, even if it was only for a minute. I had to have this moment.” Her eyes pleaded with him.

He turned and looked out of the panoramic windows facing north up Loch Riddon. The last of the day’s sunlight was edging away from Glendaruel.
