My family Passion Over Presley: Based on a True Story and to

~Myles and Jared, My Inspiration~

Presley

Presley's mother always told him that despite his continuous experiences with failure, he would never learn. "Nice guys always finish last, Presley." She told his father the same phrase the day he left home for the last time. Presley would sit on the porch watching his father slurp down the second, then third bottle of gin and toss the trash on Passion Over Presley: Based on a True Story the front lawn. The bottles sat on the grass Passion Over Presley: Based on a True Story scattered and complacent, as if they were meant to be there. His father would just keep drinking until his mother's voice faded into the air.

"And you could take your son with you for once. John, that boy has been waiting to visit with you all Passion Over Presley: Based on a True Story day and you have yet to take him Passion

Over Presley: Based on a True Story for a visit.” She would always talk under her breath, loud enough for everyone to hear. To this day she did not stop to care who heard her mouthing off, as long as it was not a nun. Presley’s father would chug his drink and fill his lungs to capacity and wave his hand around stumbling over the sidewalk.

Presley had hoped the man would come back this time, it was his usual routine. Even if it was for money and another round of physical fun with his wife, he would still come back. Not this time. And he certainly wasn’t taking Presley anywhere with him, not Passion Over Presley: Based on a True Story even a discussion.

He would chuckle down the street yelling obscenities at his mother and Presley only watched in wonder from day to day at how his life functioned. It was a mutual agreement between the three of them. Dad would get drunk, mom would yell, dad would leave, mom would yell some more. Presley would wait, his father would eventually return, mom would give him some money, dad would get drunk and start the cycle over again.

That was 20 years ago, today Presley found him at the closest and cheapest funeral home in the city. All of his father’s usual friends cluttered around John’s dead body, as it lay in a closed casket full of embalming fluid and false Passion Over Presley: Based on a True Story glory. Presley’s father was a figure to be recognized in these parts because there were other winos, but Drunk John Passion Over Presley: Based on a True Story was the worst addict. He would forget his own name from time to time, and even forget that Presley (his only son) even existed. John was only familiar with two things, drinking and cheating and it didn’t really matter what order it came in.

Sometimes Presley found himself wondering how John didn’t have a few fatherless children stashed around the funeral crowd. Unfortunately for Presley, the only bit of comfort he received was imagining his mother sitting beside him in the vacant space on the church pew. Presley could imagine her gritting Passion Over Presley: Based on a True Story those pearly white teeth, trying not to laugh at the “sorry excuse for half-a-man.” She always knew how best to insult her husband, and taught Passion Over Presley: Based on a True Story everyone in the room how to do it correctly.

The crowd was small, consisting of haters and coworkers, John’s usual women and the rest of them were Passion Over Presley: Based on a True Story his Passion Over Presley: Based on a True Story drinking partners. The elder yet obnoxious misfits all gathered around the funerals of their piers but neither one of them changed their ways afterward, Passion Over Presley: Based on a True Story deciding to live a decent life in memory of those that have passed. Instead these forty-something's would leave here and go celebrate John's death with more drunkenness, and then someone else would drop dead. Presley remained seated and nodded with the rest of Passion Over Presley: Based on a True Story the crowd as the uplifting sermon made the ice melt between the gatherers so that one and all could pay respects undeserved to a man Presley knew as father but not as family.

The reverend went on and on with his shenanigans, pretending to hold some spiritual TV show and did everything except backflip in front of Passion Over Presley: Based on a True Story the crowd. Passion Over Presley: Based on a True Story He preached for Passion Over Presley: Based on a True Story five minutes before sweat began Passion Over Presley: Based on a True Story to pour from his head and gather at the neck of his shirt. Then it was the finale of John's existence as a good man, Presley began his speech to ascend Passion Over Presley: Based on a True Story his father's soul.

"My father was a good man." It was the Passion Over Presley: Based on a True Story first line of his speech. Presley tilted the large glasses on the end of his nose and looked over the pulpit at the crowd still surprised so many cared enough to come. "My Passion Over Presley: Based on a True Story father was...a good person." Well hell this was going wonderful. "Honestly I don't know who the hell my father was. All I ever saw was the back of his head as Passion Over Presley: Based on a True Story he walked away or the bottom of a bottle as he chugged it down his throat." Presley looked up from the scribbled words, the lies he nearly told.

Presley could hear the silence in the room. Maybe the visitors were expecting a more fabricated speech. Presley looked around the room and noticed a beautiful familiar face. His heart began to speed up and his knees became a little weak. He finished the speech as quickly as possible and tossed a solid fist towards his father's coffin-a signal of triumph that his father would give him every day as he walked away from his responsibilities. There was a small yet strange applause and his eyes captured hers, then Presley led her outside the church to the front steps.

"Michelle!" Presley was so excited to see her that he threw his arms around her shoulders and hugged tightly. "I haven't seen you in a long time, what are you doing here?" Michelle smiled at him and Passion Over Presley: Based on a True Story tossed her hair to the back of her neck. She was skinny and her face looked rough, as if the world had gotten to her and spent more time beating her down rather than helping her up.
