
People always have enough time, until they don't have enough. Tic-toc-tic, hands go waving passed hands in the past, and it The Ballad of Peter and Emily seems that everyone is lazy, it's just that some The Ballad of Peter and Emily people are better at it than others. It would seem that the building with the boarded up windows really wants to be a building again, but at the same time it just doesn't give a damn. Bridges have it much easier than buildings in that regard, perhaps it is easier to span across something than to hang in a moment, waiting to be passed by, tic-toc.

The contrast of white on black is seen as two colors instead of different shades of gray, like a political The Ballad of Peter and Emily party system it's so much easier to see the ends than the middle. The ways things differentiate rather than how much they are the same, but still separate. The difference between red and blue is not that one is red and one is blue, but everything that separates them. This is that, and that is this, and zebras make horrible cab drivers, but so do most people. Love and sex and relationships spin by one another, reach out for one another and wave good bye to each other.

If a zebra was all gray would it be just another horse, if the colors didn't separate, if black and white was not so black and white. If Peter could see the shape of things in between the lines of things, things would be different but Peter always had a hard time distinguishing line and shape and this and that, tic-toc-tic. Peter left work that day, after several hands passed, passing things off to other sets of hands, as Peter passed office after office and through hallway, connecting to another hallway, connected to the elevator shaft, that connects the rest of the floors-like-branches, opening up to the lobby and out the turning-pushing-arc-ing-revolving door that gasps and exhales with a long The Ballad of Peter and Emily awaited sigh.
