INTRODUCCIÓN

Lo que sigue es la versión revisada de una conferencia que di en diciembre de 2012 en TEDxEuston, un simposio anual centrado en África. En él, una serie de oradores de campos diversos dan breves charlas dedicadas a estimular e inspirar tanto a los africanos como a los amigos de África. Hace unos años hablé en otro simposio de TED, donde pronuncié una charla titulada «Los peligros de la historia única», acerca de cómo los estereotipos limitan nuestro pensamiento y le dan forma, particularmente los estereotipos sobre África. Me da la impresión de que la palabra «feminista», y la idea en sí del feminismo, también se ven constreñidas por los estereotipos. Cuando mi hermano Chuks y mi mejor amigo Ike, los dos coorganizadores del simposio TEDxEuston, me insistieron en que participara con una conferencia, no pude negarme. Decidí hablar de Todos deberíamos ser feministas (Spanish Edition) feminismo porque es algo muy importante para mí. Sospechaba que tal vez no fuera un tema muy popular, pero también confiaba en Todos deberíamos ser feministas (Spanish Edition) iniciar una conversación necesaria. De forma que aquella noche, mientras estaba sobre el estrado, sentí que me encontraba en presencia de una familia, de un público amable y atento, pero que podía oponer resistencia a mi charla. Al final su aplauso cerrado me dio esperanzas.

TODOS TENDRÍAMOS QUE SER FEMINISTAS

Okoloma era uno de mis mejores amigos de infancia. Vivía en mi calle y me cuidaba Todos deberíamos ser feministas (Spanish Edition) como si fuera mi hermano mayor: si a mí me gustaba un chico, yo le Todos deberíamos ser feministas (Spanish Edition) pedía opinión a Okoloma. Okoloma era gracioso e inteligente y llevaba botas de vaquero con las punteras picudas. En diciembre de 2005, Okoloma murió en un accidente de aviación en el sur de Nigeria. Todavía me cuesta expresar cómo me sentí. Okoloma era una persona con la que yo podía discutir, reírme y hablar de verdad. También fue la primera persona que me llamó «feminista».
